GardenAdvice Bee project

<https://www.facebook.com/GardenAdviceBeeProject/>

If you're up to a bit of hard work then we could do with your assistance with our Bee Project. Our bee project is designed to support over 10,000 mini Bee and other pollinating insects mini reserves created in our members and viewers gardens.

Whilst it's not possible with the resources available to us to carry out research in disease and pests affecting Bees it is possible with your help to create a network of gardens that provide Bees and other pollinating insects with a reliable supply of food and shelter in changing climate conditions. In simple terms the spring activity in plants, animals and insects is triggered mainly by accumulative light and temperatures levels designed to trigger the activity of insects such as bees and plants to work together to the benefit of both in respect of pollination and food sources.
